Florida State Board of Education Approves New Behavioral Health High School Curriculum, Launching Pathway to Profession and a Long-Term Solution to Shortage

Behavioral Health Technician curriculum developed by School District of Palm Beach County, in partnership with BeWellPBC and community organizations, to become statewide offering Palm Beach County, Fla.—The State Board of Education announced today approval of the new Behavioral Health Technician Program, a first-of-its-kind secondary curriculum created and designed by the School District of Palm Beach County and offered statewide, to prepare high school students for employment immediately after graduation and set them on a path to lifelong careers. Long-term, the program aims to create a diverse and inclusive workforce pipeline and address the critical behavioral health professional shortage. According to data from Kaiser Family Foundation, Florida’s Health Professional Shortage Areas meet only 19% of the state’s mental health needs.

The Behavioral Health-Focused School Project Team that came together to develop the program was led by BeWellPBC and the School District of Palm Beach County’s Choice and Career Options and Behavioral and Mental Health Departments, and included Palm Beach County Youth Services Department, CareerSource Palm Beach County, United Way of Palm Beach County, and several other partners. Before creating the final curriculum, School District of Palm Beach County medical administrator Dr. Miguel Benavente and the project team conducted a two-year pilot from 2019-2021 comprised of 350 juniors and seniors from five high schools with high diversity and inclusion populations. With feedback from students and teachers in the pilot, Dr. Benavente and colleagues wrote the curriculum with funding from Quantum Foundation and the Education Foundation of Palm Beach County.

The state-approved course is designed for high school medical academies where juniors and seniors can choose to take the specialized curriculum once they have completed their general medical prerequisites. The course provides an integrated cross-trained foundation and practical experience in behavioral and social sciences with content including basic psychopharmacology, patient teaching and education, diseases and disorders, suicide prevention, and much more. What makes the rigorous curriculum unique is the inclusion of societal issues affecting behavioral health that can be customized to a school's surrounding environment.

"Students learn about diseases and disorders, and they also learn about social impacts, including the opioid crisis, human trafficking, and trauma resiliency," said Dr. Benavente. "Schools and teachers can tailor the curriculum to their students, communities, and those who need help locally."

Overlaying the comprehensive curriculum is healthy equity, prevention, and teaching students about their own self-care, an important component given high burnout in the field. "We're teaching students how to promote others' mental wellness and their own," said Dr. Benavente.

The curriculum was designed to provide the learning and experience necessary to pass the Behavioral Health Technician Certification by the Florida Certification Board. Before graduating high school, students will have completed the coursework, taken the certification exam, and begun working toward the required 1,500 field hours for the certification. A provisional certification upon graduating will be granted so that students can work in an entry level position immediately. They will receive the full Behavioral Health Technician certification once they are 18 years old and complete their field hours.

CareerSource Palm Beach County has been an important partner for identifying internships where students can be placed for field work while in high school and full-time entry level positions upon graduation. Students will be prepared to support facilities such as group care homes and residential treatment centers, acting as floor staff, co-facilitating groups, and gaining meaningful experience as they explore the many job opportunities available in the field.

"CareerSource PBC is proud to support the school district in its efforts to enrich their curriculum offerings to include the Behavioral Health Technician," said Julia Dattolo, president and CEO of CareerSource Palm Beach County. "Partnerships like this allow for rapid response to our healthcare community with trained and work ready professionals. Once again, the district is at the forefront of responding to community need and we are proud to partner with them."

Palm Beach County Youth Services Department has already agreed to accept Behavioral Health Technician interns. "Hosting interns allows for the development of a needed workforce pipeline and creates career readiness for our youth," said Tammy Fields, director of Palm Beach County Youth Services.

While the curriculum is available to all districts across the state, the School District of Palm Beach County estimates the program could benefit up to 6,000 students in 20 high school medical academy programs in their community when it is launched in August 2022. Beyond local impact on the workforce in the near future, the program provides a pipeline to university programs for advanced degrees, helping to overcome industry shortages for higher level positions.

"The most exciting thing is that this is a long-term solution," said Lauren Zuchman, executive director of BeWellPBC. "Two years from now we will have a pool of people who can get jobs right away and are on the pathway to a lifelong career. Our task force was determined to build and fill the pipeline with diverse behavioral health professions we so desperately need locally and across the state. This program is the starting point for communities to develop their own professionals for generations to come."
